

ArborTags

The leaves of the weeping cherry can be up to 4 inches long and half as wide. They come to a long point and are sharply saw-toothed.

www.arborworks.org

Prunus subhirtella
var. pendula

Weeping Cherry

Prunus subhirtella
var. pendula

Weeping Cherry

The flowers are from pink to red, about one-half inch wide, borne in clusters of two to five blossoms. The fruit is a small cherry which matures to a shiny black.

www.arborworks.org

©1996 American Association of Amateur Arborists

A wide spreading and gracefully weeping variety of the cherry, this is a fast growing ornamental. The bark is gray on young branches, with the typical horizontal lenticels.

www.arborworks.org

Prunus subhirtella
var. pendula

Weeping Cherry

Prunus subhirtella
var. pendula

Weeping Cherry

Another variety, the "autumnalis", and other cultivars have been bred as double flowering varieties making a showy ornamental even more glamorous. The Yoshino Cherry also has a weeping form whose branches cascade to the ground.

www.arborworks.org