

ArborTags

The leaves which are narrow and lance-shaped (2-5 inches) have long pointed tips and are dark green above with a whitish underside. The edges are finely saw-toothed.

www.arborworks.org

Salix babylonica

Weeping Willow

Babylon Willow

Salix babylonica

Weeping Willow

Babylon Willow

The tree bears bright yellow flowers in the spring on long catkins or drooping clusters of very small blossoms. The seeds are very small and mature in early summer.

www.arborworks.org

©1996 American Association of Amateur Arborists

The bark is thick and rough, and deeply furrowed in older trees. Multiple trunks add to the density of the characteristic drooping branches and twigs.

www.arborworks.org

Salix babylonica

Weeping Willow

Babylon Willow

Salix babylonica

Weeping Willow

Babylon Willow

Known for its drooping or weeping greenery this willow is the first to sprout in the early spring, and the last to shed its leaves in the fall. Originally from China, this is a fast growing, water-loving tree. Its name possibly derives from the willows mentioned in the 137th Psalm.

www.arborworks.org